

The weight of light

The weight is inseparable from the material and from the edge of the earth, or surface.

The non-contact with the surface makes the oxymoron of weight appear to float like light.

The matter is suspended and the contact is the shadow; the light of the darkness touches the drawing of the matter. The weight of the matter is the light that it draws and embosses the profile thicknesses of the matter.

Paola Ricci © June 2011